The story of John Alexander Anderson and the Heber Post Office at _____ North Main Street.

The story goes like this; early each morning on his way to work at his hardware store, he pulled up in front of the Post Office and left his car running and when he got out, his belly shifted gear and the car began to move slowly but surely, forward, over the curb onto the sidewalk and banged into the front window of the post office breaking the windows and coming to rest against the building still running. After this happened the third time, the people on the street asked him: "John, where are you mailing it today?"

Of course this generated much excitement and lament, as this unfolded.

It is alledged that this happened more than three times, at the chagrin of John Anderson.
